

Profile

Grace Armah completed her pharmacy education from the Kwame Nkrumah University of Science and Technology(KNUST), Kumasi-Ghana in 2015. She then proceeded to pursue a Master of Public Health at the University of Ghana (UG), Accra-Ghana in 2017.

Grace holds a Certificate in Leadership and Management in Health, a Certificate in Project Management in Global Health as well as a Certificate in Economic Evaluation in Global Health all from University of Washington.

Grace is driven by the idea that all young people can be mentored to be the best they can ever be in any field of interest. Through her speaking engagements and advocacy meet-ups, she aims to help young people understand their role as leaders who shape the world around them. Her passion for young people is one to be admired and an ever-active endeavor she champions through her working interactions as a health professional, youth leader and public speaker.

Grace aspires to be one of the policy makers in her country where she could leverage on her expertise and capabilities to work closely with various stakeholders and government agencies to address challenging healthcare issues through active stewardship, policy leadership and educational programs.
